Reduce costs and mitigate risks
by collaborating with a specialist fund data provider

Fund distributors and wealth managers face significant challenges around data collection due to the extreme fragmentation of information. Data is scattered across thousands of asset managers and administrators, requiring aggregation from multiple sources. This complexity is compounded by the ever increasing volume of data needed for compliance and research purposes.

Specialised data providers play a crucial role in collating, validating, and disseminating this data. Ideally, they would have direct contracts established with asset managers to ensure a steady flow of up-to-date information, essential for making informed investment decisions. Automated validations and expert oversight help maintain high data quality.

Outsourcing data management to these providers reduces costs, mitigates business risks, and allows firms to focus on their core activities. Expertise in specific investment vehicles enhances data relevance and accuracy. Overall, these providers are vital in managing the growing data demands in the asset management industry.
